

Basic principle of Trombe wall construction

A Trombe wall is a north-facing wall of high thermal mass combined with an air space and insulated glazing. The wall absorbs heat from the sun. Heated air rises and enters the house through vents at the top. It is replaced by cooler air drawn by convection from the interior through low level vents. The vents are closed when heat is not required.