

Designing for ventilation and high winds

The effect of doors on opposite sides of a building, room or hallway should be considered. If they are both open at the same time, depending on prevailing wind directions, this may lead to doors slamming shut or items being blown around. If external doors are located on sheltered sides of the house, this is less likely to occur.